NASA partners show off tech at open house

Posted by Miriam Olsson

SUNNYVALE, Calif.--NASA research partners showed off their technologies and collaborative work Tuesday at an open house here at the Ames Research Center, one of the space administration's 10 facilities nationwide. The free event attracted a crowd of both NASA staff members and outsiders. (Click here for related video.)

Various research projects, companies and universities are based at the NASA campus. Among the academic partners is Carnegie Mellon University West, which offers software degree programs on the campus.

on your Web site. It's also developing hardware such as LifeZig Video to be used in health care for people who suffer from memory loss or dementia. The machine is supposed to show images of things from your past in a more dynamic way than in a slideshow or a video.

NASA partner IntelgenTek is selling license plate recognition software and object-tracking systems. The police department in Taipei, Taiwan is now in the process of installing it in its 8,000 surveillance cameras all over the city.
